A dazzling blue sky; a generous reef bound expanse of clear transparent water, in whose lucid depths sport myriads of funny dwarfs, no less dazzling in their brilliant colorings than the coral gardens which carpet the expanse below them; a long, low stretch of beach, bordered with lofty palms, incline gracefully in their various angles, interspersed by numerous thatched roofs, extending far over the gables of the native hamlets; bright, cheerful rows of cottages shaded by majestic trees; all background by skyward miles of savage rocks, whose tops break into bold crags, the whole presenting a restful harmony in browns and grays. This is Tahiti, the paradise of the Pacific. Hidden by the spreading branches of bread fruit trees, Papeete, its capital, stretches gracefully along the beach and extends back to the foothills, the most beautiful spot in the great "milky way of the ocean." Beheld from bulky as such chimneys usually Directshipment the deck of the incoming mail, the picture is strikingly pretty and restful to the eye. Along the sward stroll bevies of dark eyed girls attired in light muslins, with here and there a gaudy shawl giving color to the view; down the beach had at some time through a low the lithe, lean lads canter their walled-up doorway, that was conponies, looking, as they dash by, tor approving glances from their elders, who squat upon the ground

Finished with their evening meal, they gather to triangle of lanes lay a little emporgossip, drink, dance, sing, and make merry. About the fountain they congregate in groups, and paid duty, and whence the taychant their peculiar, monotonous music, while a bronzed "Othello" ladens the air with the wailing strains of an accordeon or har monica, mingling its dirge with the drip of the fountain. beauty and freshness of the surroundings. Emerging from this leafy bower, a deliciously cool brook comes into view, murmuring softly as it winds its way by the close underbrush, dancing in the warm sun as it flows into the open, then rippling away into the distance of refreshing green palms, and disappearing into their depths.

It is all like a delicious dream; but landscape and life on this beautiful isle are impressionist, and will submit neither to photography nor the pen. Years of study cannot itemize the picture. There still remains in the memory but a soft sweet haze of shifting light and shade-a wilderness of happy silence and contentful ease.
